Sep 7, 2016 - Title: Textbook of Microbiology : 5th Edition.Q: SQL Server - find the mean of several columns I have a select statement that I have been using with a nice little single column I'm trying to get the same result with several columns instead. Select from MyTable This yields a single column result with count 1 for each value in that column. I can't find the simple way to get the mean for each column with the select statement. A: You can do: SELECT (SELECT AVG() FROM table) FROM table; Or in your case SELECT (SELECT AVG() + AVG() + AVG()) FROM table; If you have more columns, you can do a similar thing. Accidental oesophageal perforation during percutaneous liver biopsy. We report a case of accidental oesophageal perforation during percutaneous liver biopsy, which was managed conservatively. The patient developed cervical abscess formation at the site of perforation. The biopsy site was cauterized and the patient was started on antituberculous therapy, following which he responded favorably. The sputum cultures remained negative. Biopsy samples were not obtained because the procedure was performed in an ambulatory setting with adequate analgesia, and there was no evidence of infection.var isArray = require('../lang/isArray'); var repeat = require('../string/repeat'); var toInteger = require('./toInteger'); var toPosInteger = require('./toPosInteger'); /* Built-in method references for those with the same name as other `lodash` methods. */ var nativeMax = Math.max; / * Creates a function like `_.round`. * * @private * @param {string} methodName The name of the `round` method to use when rounding. * @returns {Function} Returns the new round function. */ function createRound(methodName) { var func = Math[methodName]; return function(
