Massive intra-abdominal hemorrhage is often difficult to control and is associated with a high mortality rate. Percutaneous thrombus extraction is a minimally invasive modality to reduce the volume of hematoma and improve hemodynamics. In the present study we describe an original technique of endovascular thrombus extraction for massive intra-abdominal bleeding. In a porcine model, a balloon-expandable stent with various designs and anti-platelet agents were deployed into the thrombus for 15 min. The thrombotic mass was finally extracted after the stent was expanded. The volume of the extracted thrombus measured on a computerized tomography scan was compared with and without stent deployment. The volume of extracted thrombus was 133.4 +/- 48.9 mL (without stent) and 213.7 +/- 60.4 mL (with stent). This difference was statistically significant (P [Nucleus pulposus cell in disc degeneration of the lumbar spine]. The results of nucleus cell experimentations in the disc are presented. The data of the nucleus pulposus cell count in 10 patients are compared with laboratory findings in 43 asymptomatic volunteers. The nucleus cell count was significantly lower in the patient group than in the control group. A correlation was found between the lowered nucleus cell count and the degree of degeneration of the disc. The study indicated the possibility of utilizing nucleus cell count in the diagnosis of degeneration in disc herniation.Seven Tips For Your Retirement Spouse Hansu Dindia, codirector of national retirement income advocacy group RetirementConfidence.org, says these tips can help your spouse reduce the stress of investing in your own retirement. 1.
