* The selection tool is basically a brush with a line in it; it lets you delete parts of an image or add a new layer and isolate parts of your image with the brush to create new areas of your image. The selection tools let you paint across layers as well as isolate parts of an image on a specific layer. You can use the brush or selection tools to cut, copy, or manipulate layers of an image. * The marquee tool is a rectangular square that you can use to "cut" out parts of an image. You can change the size of the marquee tool by using the tool options on the status bar. (The option to invert the marquee is disabled by default; see Tip for a description of the other tool options.) * The paintbrush tool is similar to the marquee tool but allows you to click inside an image to create a brushstroke. You can edit the paintbrush tool by changing its size and opacity; or you can change the color of your paint by choosing a color from a palette. The paintbrush tool lets you create custom shapes using a rectangle or square to make a brushstroke. * The Lasso tool is a drawing tool with a bounding box that defines the area that you want to select. You can change the size, shape, and opacity of the area that you're selecting using the Tool Options on the status bar. When you click inside the image, a box appears, letting you draw a box around the area of the image you want to select. You can also make a selection using the Lasso tool. By holding down the CTRL (Windows) or CMD (Mac) key, you can drag to draw a selection box, and the image fills with a different color. (For more on the Lasso tool, read the box at right.) * The eyedropper tool is similar to the paintbrush tool in that it allows you to paint on the image directly, but it automatically highlights areas of a selected color. You can pick colors from the current image, or you can add a new layer and paint colors onto it.

Q: How to check color with background image in javascript I have an image (background-image: url('myImage.jpg');) that contains a blue color I have no idea how to display the blue color in my image. I want to use javascript for this. Is it possible? A: I would do something like this: `var background_image = document.getElementById('background_image'); if (background_image.style.background) { if (background_image.style.background == 'url(images/square_blue.jpg)') { alert('blue'); } else if (background_image.style.background == 'url(images/square_yellow.jpg)') { alert('yellow'); } else if (background_image.style.background == 'url(images/square_purple.jpg)') { alert('purple'); } } }` Q: Android - What is the default app for placing in text files? I recently transferred to a new job, where the company is using a custom app called Evernote, to help them deal with documents, papers and so on. Is there a default application that Android can use to place text files in it's default location? A: I had a similar problem and found this third-party app called Advanced File Manager in the Market to be very helpful in opening text files. There's also a free version that doesn't have the cloud-backed storage. Photoimaging of surface-localized nitric oxide using a nitric oxide-sensing molecular electronic switch. The key to the design of signal-on photoimaging devices is the understanding of the nature of photoinduced charge separation in the absence of any charge transport between the two components of a photochemical system. In this contribution, a molecular electronic photoimaging device fabricated from a natural amino acid is presented. The photoimaging device is based on a component that can sense the presence of nitric oxide in solution, which in its turn can control the conformation of a visible photoswitch in the device. In the absence of the nitric oxide-sensing component, the visible photoswitch is in the closed, isomer
