These can be changed by clicking on the respective preset; they are listed in the Preferences section, in the Settings section of the application. The Audio input can be set using the Preferences menu, or on-screen. Additionally, there is an option for the users to monitor the process, using a waveform or an oscilloscope, and a built-in circular buffer, which allows for recording the incoming audio, along with the corresponding pitch. You can also use the command line, which supports a plethora of options, though this should be used with caution, as the program requires the input of a password everytime. Additionally, the application automatically documents the results of the process.
