NomadFactory change robot-only on/ off ·Release of N-acetyl-alpha-D-galactosaminidase from rat spleen. The activity of N-acetyl-alpha-D-galactosaminidase and the enzymes of the hexosamine metabolic pathway were measured in the rat spleen. N-acetyl-alpha-D-galactosaminidase and the hexosamine pathway enzymes were released into the supernatant of the homogenized spleen tissue and the specific activity in the supernatant was significantly higher than in the homogenate. The possible release mechanism was studied in vitro. The release of the enzyme increased with decreasing pH and with the concentration of detergent. However, addition of protease inhibitors to the homogenization solution of spleen prevented the loss of the enzyme activity during the incubation. Therefore, it was concluded that N-acetyl-alpha-D-galactosaminidase and hexosamine pathway enzymes are released from the cells of the rat spleen by a non-proteolytic mechanism and therefore it seems to be an endogenous enzyme.Last updated on.From the section Rugby Union Jared Payne scored the only try of the match for Bath as they lost to Exeter Chiefs in the Premiership Exeter Chiefs moved to within five points of the play-off places after their Premiership win over Bath. The Exeter side came from behind when, with five minutes left, centre Jared Payne dived over at the corner. The Chiefs winger raced clear to score under the posts and when Tom Curry was fouled for the second time, James Turner was unable to convert the subsequent penalty. Exeter had to settle for the five points and Bath's only score was through scrum-half Kyle Eastmond, from a slip by George Ford. The result left Bath bottom of the table and just two points above Worcester in 11th, but Bath had the chance to climb as number eight Danny Cipriani also forced a turnover after catching out a forward pass. The home side arrived at Kingsholm from the south-west with a new-look pack with Tim Chilcott joining
