A: You might have a few options: You can sign up on the Tally website and get an email with a registration key. You can download a trial version, crack it, use the crack to obtain the activation key and get an email with an activation key, which you can then use. You can try downloading trial versions from other sites and crack it, and then use the crack to obtain the activation key. Not sure I'd recommend any of them, but as they are all free it shouldn't be a problem.

Mutation to rRNA and 8-oxoguanine modification can be induced by ultraviolet irradiation in the protein-coding regions of Mycobacterium smegmatis. The trehalose operon-encoded protein TmpR of Mycobacterium smegmatis regulates a variety of trehalose-associated processes, such as trehalose utilization, trehalose uptake, cell envelope properties and mycobacterial virulence, as well as pathogenicity of M. tuberculosis and other bacterial species. The trehalose operon of M. smegmatis includes two genes, treA and treB, of which treA encodes the trehalase (TlpA), and treB encodes the trehalose-specific importer (TsiB). In this study, we found that the induction of the transformation of TmpR under conditions of ultraviolet (UV) irradiation was dependent on the presence of TlpA. This result suggests that trehalase is involved in the transformation of the purified protein TmpR in the presence of UV irradiation. The trehalase gene (tlpA) was also found to be required for the transformation of TmpR by UV. Furthermore, rRNA processing, suggesting that proteins involved in rRNA processing can be induced by UV irradiation, was observed when the wild type strain was exposed to UV irradiation. Finally, 8-oxoguanine (8-oxoG), one of the most toxic oxidative DNA bases, was detected in the protein-coding region of wild type strain exposed to UV irradiation. Taken together, our results suggest that the transformation of TmpR caused by UV irradiation is related to the Tre-specific trehalase gene and 8-oxoG is induced in the protein-coding region by UV irradiation.
