Distinct causes of coronary artery disease in older and younger persons: a cohort study.

Coronary artery disease (CAD) is the most common cause of death and disability in older persons. Few data are available on the underlying causes of CAD in older persons. To determine whether the causes of CAD differ between younger and older persons. Cohort study. Using data from the Calgary Health Area Coronary Artery Surgery and Transluminal Angioplasty Study, we compared the distribution of atherosclerotic risk factors, patterns of angiographic CAD, and underlying causes of CAD in older persons (65-74 years of age, n = 1,716) compared with younger persons (35-64 years of age, n = 1,063). In the older group, CAD was attributable to conventional cardiovascular risk factors in only half of the patients and was attributable to noncardiovascular risk factors in 6% to 10% of patients. CAD was attributable to cardiovascular risk factors in only 27% of patients in the younger group and in an additional 16% to 17% of Hartsfield (also known as Harold A. Hartfield) is the tenth mayor of Atlanta (from 1974 to 1982) and a lawyer. Hartfield served on the Atlanta City Council from 1963 to 1974, from 1977 to. propose to examine the cellular and subcellular sites of synthesis of human monocyte-specific antigens, the response to in vitro exposure to tumor cells and the kinetics of antibody formation in vitro. We have established that non-activated human monocytes lack detectable membrane-associated forms of these antigens and have developed purification procedures to obtain highly pure monocytes. In collaboration with Dr. Thomas Waldmann at the NCI we are testing the ability of such monocytes to recognize tumor cells in vitro and initiate lysis. These experiments involve the attachment of monocytes to plastic wells (in the presence of multivalent antigen) and are accompanied by flow cytometric analysis to measure and define the extent of activation and the surface antigen expression. While preliminary, the results from these experiments in the Waldmann laboratory are suggestive of a bystander effect and activation when a monocyte encounters a tumor cell. We have developed various techniques for the study of both the generation and expression of antibodies to a variety of human tumor-associated antigens. Experiments to date indicate that these antibodies may recognize a variety of molecular forms of the particular antigens. We have begun to assess the specificity of these antibodies for particular cell membrane antigens.

Main navigation 1 in 3 1 in 3 is a public service announcement project by the digital education nonprofit Econsultancy. The project aims to “raise the debate about gender inequality in the field of technology,” and was created in cooperation with other organizations and individuals. The project uses infographics to illustrate the 25% of IT jobs that are held by women. You can see the below infographic on the project's website. Gender equality is a hot topic in the tech industry these days, and it's time to stop talking and start doing.

1 in 3 highlights the lack of female representation in technology and the software development industry. An estimated one third of the IT industry is held by women, according to a new research.

Sixty per cent of women say they have experienced discrimination in the workplace, particularly when it comes to the submission of applications, interviews and raises
